Reflections on POLITICAL ECONOMY,
and the
PROSPECT BEFORE US.
Addressed to the CITIZENS of the Western Country.

NO. II.

IN the general commerce of life, it is well known that the soil of the earth is the only true capital from whence all the necessities and comforts of our condition are derived. The wealth or poverty of a state is inseparably connected with the mode by which the capital is managed. If all its productions or profits are annually consumed by the cultivator, then neither the individual nor the state receive a benefit beyond the demands of the present occasion. If on the other hand, the capital is so regulated by prudence, as to yield enough for present consumption and a surplus for exportation, the state preserves a ratio of increasing prosperity. It is this export balance which is sent out for the purpose of being exchanged for the commodities of other nations. When it returns back again in any shape whatever, the original capital is left unimpaired, and a part of the wealth of other communities brought into our own and added to the stock of its wealth.

Now the great art in the economy of a state is, never to limit the quantity of consumption to the quantity of production, but invariably to pursue the saving mean, by which a surplus may be always ready for exportation, to draw in the wealth of other nations.

It has been the misfortune, however, of this country, from the period of its settlement to this moment, to pursue a direct contrary course. A portion of the globe, exceeded by no other in fertility of soil and variety of productions, with the examples of older communities before it, to make it wise in the prudent application of its natural blessings, has, of all others, been the most unpardonably erroneous upon this great subject. The majority of the farming interest, emigrating from Virginia, the most dissipated state in the union, brought with them all the vices of that misguided policy in economy, for which it is so eminently distinguished. Instead of cultivating the earth to produce materials for domestic manufacture, when no markets were open for exchange, they have been in the habit of consuming foreign articles altogether. The effect of this plan may be divided into two points of injury. They diminished the wealth of the soil without adding to their own or the opulence of the state, by consuming all that was made. In the second place, to gratify the habits of indolence and extravagance they seized upon the circulating medium of the country, which had come into the state by emigration alone, gave it in exchange for foreign articles, and thereby lost the benefit of its circulation. In addition to this, when it was no longer possible to command money from its general deficit in the state, application was then made to a third species of capital. The moral reputation became mortgaged for the fantastic productions of foreign countries, and credit ensued. Now what is the real amount of this economy at the present moment? No one can deny that it has been in practice from the period of our settlement in the West to the present time.

1st. The natural capital of the soil has been in some measure wasted.

2d. Except during Indian wars, money has been in general so exceedingly lax in its circulation among the various classes of society, that it has occasioned the loss of credit and the sacrifice of property, in innumerable cases. It has compelled the necessity of a dishonest kind of traffic, called trading, by which the habits of knavery have been encouraged, and the courts of justice filled with fraudulent claims and vexatious altercations, that serve to embitter resentment and destroy the peace of society. It has sometimes prevented the full and complete discharge of taxes, by which our treasury has been compelled to issue its paper security, and thereby opened a door for speculating on the funds of our government.

These two points will exhibit the real features of our economy from the injudicious management of our natural resources. They will raise a presumption, that whatever figure the country may make in the arts of improvement at the present time, and the private condition of individuals, that the first have been made from resources not immediately derived from our own capital, and that the latter is hollow and uncertain. If our economy has not been of a profitable nature, if consumption has kept pace with production in the management of the soil, and there has been no fund preserving a ratio of profit to balance with our expenditures, this must be the case. To form an accurate estimate on the subject, the state of improvements and the fortunes of individuals, must be taken in the mass. For instance, let all the wealth of individuals which actually passed into the state with their emigration, compose one item of the calculation. To this let all the debts due either from those individuals in their private capacity to foreigners, or from the government of other states be added together, so as to form an aggregate sum. Among these private debts due from individuals to foreigners, may be classed those that are due to the cash merchant, for as soon as they are collected they will not circulate in the state, but be sent out to a foreign market. On the other hand, let the real profits of our labour since we began to push our natural capital into action, be thrown into another item, and balanced against the amount of the foregoing estimate. By this means, if I am not much mistaken, we shall perceive that we have not been advancing so rapidly as might be expected. We shall find that our natural capital has produced little or nothing; that we have arisen to our present grade more by the force of extensive resources than by the immediate operation of our own economical advantages. We are indebted in part to what wealth was brought into the country by emigration. That has been voluntary and makes some figure. Something, perhaps, may be added to this from our Mississippi commerce, the exportation of cattle, pecuniary impositions made by former military establishments, and the operation of the general government, in the country, in other respects.

If the state holds any kind of wealth, that is either active or apparent, it is derived from these sources. The agricultural class, in general, has consumed almost every thing they have made, and besides this, run in debt for foreign articles of consumption. The mercantile class, in general, have done nothing to enrich the country one penny. They have opened no markets for any other commodity, than money. They have held out no encouragement to labour, and given no rewards to ingenuity and industry.

Originally too poor to extend their views beyond the simple exchange of their commodities for money, they sent nothing but cash to market, and took the whole profit of the commerce to themselves. Whatever was brought in by emigration and circulated among the people was concentrated into the hands of this useful class, and sent off again. In the mean time those commodities for which the people had given their money was consumed in the country. Not a penny of wealth was added either to the state or acquired by the mass of citizens at large. None were benefited but the merchant. It was nothing, therefore, but the equal pace which was kept between the quantum of money sent away by the merchant, and the quantum that was brought in by emigration, that saved the state from a condition more deplorable than what I have described to be at present.

We are not, however, beyond the point of retraction. The evil is not of such a nature, but it may be removed, and our former errors expiated by our future wisdom. If our present wealth is visionary, and our conditions, as citizens, hollow and uncertain; if we have not put our capital to that active use of which it is susceptible, and enriched ourselves by the means which nature has bountifully thrown in our way, it is not too late to repair our misfortunes. We are a young country and the world is before us. Let us attain a correct knowledge of ourselves, and we shall be sufficiently wise to reform, when reformation becomes a duty.

ARISTIDES.

PARIS, June 15.

To Bonaparte the Great, the undersubscribing soldiers, members of the Senate, the Legislative Body and the Tribune.

GENERAL.

We are come to ask a favor, which you will not refuse to our zeal and our affection.

Without desiring to pry into the secrets of your wisdom, in which we shall have always a full and entire confidence; and only, if such be the order of your designs; and, in case that you shall not have disposed of us otherwise, we intent you to admit us on board the vessel which is to carry you to England; and with you the vengeance and the destiny of the people of France.

JUNE 20.

The minister of the interior has just addressed to the prefects the following circular.

Citizen Prefect—The British cabinet wishes for war. Not contented with domineering over Asia and America, England aspires to govern Europe. She pretends to the exclusive possession of the commerce of the world, and has dared to exclude us from the ports of the Levant.—To invade every thing, to possess every thing, to render every nation tributary, to annihilate industry, where ever it be found, this is the policy, and this the ambition of its government.

The First Consul wished earnestly for peace; he has made, in order to preserve it, all the sacrifices that were compatible with his own honor, and with the national dignity; the First Consul has employed, during the negotiations, every expedient that wisdom could suggest as conciliating; but the British government had determined on war, and there is now no hope of preserving the glorious peace, which our armies had conquered.

England sickens at our commercial prosperity, and envies the rank, which the republic has taken among the powers of Europe; she wishes to degrade us; constantly tributary to her industry, we should have received the law from her commerce; but citizen prefect, our despatches are marked out by the population, and the position of France, by the character of its inhabitants, by the force of its government, and by the genius of its chief; and believe me citizen prefect, Britain, in her delirium, will dash herself against that brazen colossus, at the feet of which Europe has deposited its arms.

* But as this war is the cause of all, be it French honor and the fate of the commerce of the nation are involved in it, all ought to press round the government and especially our youth, who are called to reap the fruits of this war, ought to be ambitious of the honor of mingling in the ranks with our brave soldiers, there to learn to conquer, and to establish the repose and prosperity of France on the ruins of the British government.

(Signed) CHAPTEL.

LONDON, JULY 5.

From all we have been able to collect, we are of opinion that Bonaparte will attempt an invasion of this country.

It has been reported that he will make two feigned attacks, and one real one.—The army assembled at Deventer, is said to have for its object merely the reinforcing of the army of general Mortier: but we suspect it is meant against this country. Deventer is very advantageously situated either for an expedition from the Ems or the Scheldt. It is believed that whatever expedition is undertaken will be from the Dutch ports.

When Bonaparte left Calais he proceeded to Dunkirk, Neuport, and Ostend from whence he will go to Ghent and Antwerp. The French are extremely irritated at the capture of the fishing-boats. The Moniteur has inserted an article from Boulogne upon this subject.

We informed our readers some days ago that these fishing-boats were suffered to pursue the occupation of fishing without molestation, till it was found that they were furnished with arms and boarding pikes, with which they boarded small English merchantmen off the coasts and carried them into the ports of France. It would have been the height of folly to have suffered them to have pursued this system of operation with impunity.

We hope it is true that government intends to encourage a number of rifle companies, as they are calculated to annoy the enemy more in this country than men imagine. The hedges and ditches with which this country is inclosed form fortifications, and the proper troops to man them are rifles; the Mamelukes and Arabs are sure to destroy any French detached from the main body, and this obliged them to keep in a body. The same might be done in this country by rifles; and the French, when they land, might be compelled to keep in a body, not daring to send out any foraging party or parties to gain intelligence. The volunteer corps in the maritime counties, should all be turned into rifles as, from their local knowledge of the country, they would be able to gall the enemy extremely.

In consequence of the representations made to the French government by those who have renounced the rights of Englishmen, and enrolled themselves among the slaves of the Corsican, the following modifications have taken place in the decree for the imprisonment of the English: 1. The artifices and artizans employed in French manufactories, shall not be obliged to quit the commune where those establishments are situated, if the principals claim them, and engage to answer for them. 2. Such Englishmen as have established manufactories or commercial houses in communes, or small towns in which there is no military commandant or officer of Gendarmerie, may after submitting themselves to the officer of the nearest city, return to their manufactories or commercial houses.

3. Those Englishmen who, since the peace, and before the declaration of war, manifested an intention of establishing themselves in France, and of becoming French citizens, and who have complied with the formalities requisite for that purpose, are not comprised in the dispositions of the decree.

The merchants of Ghent, have voted several hundred thousand francs to be employed in building flat bottomed boats and gun vessels.

WASHINGTON CITY, August 24.

Settlement of American Claims on the Government of France.

The following statement is from a correct source, and may be relied on.—The United States are to pay to France, is to be paid to the citizens of the United States for claims they have upon the French government, embraced by the convention made the 30th September, by Elsworth and Davie. The second article of that convention is to be considered as null and void. The payment to the United States is to be made to the citizens thereof, in sixty days after the final ratification of the late convention by our government, and exchange of the same, which is to be done here; the payment to be made by bills drawn by our minister in Paris, on the treasury of the United States. Claimants are first to have their claims liquidated by the French government, on which claims they are to be allowed 6 per cent. per annum, from the time the claimants respectively made their demands for payment. After their claims are finally liquidated, a board of three commissioners, appointed by our ministers, are to fit in Paris, who are to examine these liquidated claims, to see if they properly are claims that are embraced under the convention of the 30th September. As soon as this is determined, the claimants shall receive their drafts, and they shall be paid as they are presented; and should the claims embraced by the convention exceed the sum of 3,750,000 dollars, the remainder is a debt remaining due from France, and to be paid by the claimants by that republic. It is understood that claims for supplies to the West-India islands, demurrages on vessels from France, vessels taken out and not restored agreeable to the convention of the 30th of September, and supplies under contracts made by officers of the French government in the United States, are the proper claims embraced by that convention.

NEW-YORK, August 18.

LOOK OUT FOR A VILLAIN.
Extract of a letter from Staunton in Virginia dated 8th August, to a gentleman in Baltimore.

A noted gambler of the name of GREENLAUGH, passed through this place yesterday on his way to the northward, and will probably visit Baltimore. In the southern states he has been guilty of passing counterfeit bank notes, of counterfeiting tobacco notes, and such like offences: it is believed he has in his possession now, a large quantity of bank notes, and of the eagle and half eagle, which are counterfeit. He is a small man, much below the common size, from twenty-five to thirty years of age. It is his custom to be armed with pistol and dirk. To apprehend such a villain would be rendering a public benefit to society."

NEW-YORK, August 25.
The expedition against England it is said, will consist of 500,000 men, in 5 divisions, to be commanded by Bonaparte, Moreau, and Bouronville; of which it is calculated that 200,000 will be destroyed in the attempt, and that the remainder will be a force sufficient to conquer the island.

LEXINGTON, SEPTEMBER 13.

DIED—On Saturday last, JOSEPH Hudson, infant son of Mr. Joseph Hudson, merchant of this place.

COMMUNICATED.

A Purchaser of Mr. Adam Rankin's "Review of the Noted Revival," presents his compliments, on behalf of himself and others, and is anxious to know when they may expect to be favored with the 18 pages, promised last year in addition to that work.

COMMUNICATED.

Messrs. Johnson and Suggett, commenced digging for salt water in Scott county, on Mc'Connell's run, in the month of September last. After digging about 25 feet, they were obliged to desist in consequence of the winter setting in; they resumed the work again this summer, and sunk a shaft about 8 feet square to the depth of 55 feet in the whole, without any considerable discovery of salt water; they then concluded to bore down a considerable depth with an inch and a half auger; accordingly they bored 15 feet, and on Tuesday evening last struck the salt water, which gushed through the hole so fast that it filled the shaft 8 feet in four hours, and has risen 26 feet high in less than 24 hours, and it is thought will rise to within 25 feet of the surface of the Earth, the place where the first appearance of salt water was discovered.

From calculation it appears that about 800 gallons of water rose through the auger hole per hour; and from the quality of the water it is the general opinion that less than 200 gallons will produce a bushel of salt, so that we may safely conclude, that water sufficient to make four bushels of salt per hour may now be had, which will be 96 bushels per day. This salt well is situated in one of the best timbered settlements in the state; and the proprietors, I understand, are determined to sell their salt from the beginning at Two Dollars per bushel.—Query. Will not the famous coalition of Mann's and Bullitt's lick, send a minister plenip. to Mc'Connell's run, as soon as they receive the above information?

We are informed that on Sunday last, a Mr. Kennedy of Hardin county, was shot through the body by Francis Pierpont. The particulars, as far as we have been able to learn, are, that Mr. Pierpont had been summoned to assist in taking Mr. Kennedy, on suspicion of having passed counterfeit Bank Notes, a few days previous to the fatal transaction. Having failed in their endeavors, Mr. Pierpont, on Sunday last, discovered him going from meeting, and demanded his surrender; upon which Mr. Kennedy endeavored to make his escape, when he instantly received the contents of a pistol in his back, which, it is said, must prove mortal. Mr. Pierpont, it is understood, intends to give himself up to the laws of his country. [West Amer.]

Accounts from N. York represent the situation of that city in the most distressing terms. The fever is fatal in nearly all the cases of its attack; and nothing has prevented the mortality from swelling to an enormous amount, but the timely and universal flight of the citizens. We sincerely hope that this circumstance, added to the present salubrious air, will ere long, "stay the pestilence."

The cession of West Florida, (says the Morning Chronicle) as mentioned in letters from our minister at Paris, is, we understand, an affair of construction. Louisiana is ceded by France to the United States in the same manner as received from Spain. The ancient boundaries recognized in these transactions are found to comprise West Florida. The latter is of course included in the present cession.

If this statement is correct, and we understand it is considered both by Mr. Livingston and Mr. Monroe, there can be no doubts of our obtaining from Spain on easy terms, the trifling residuary territory.

LONDON, July 11. In the event of an invasion, the king, it is stated, will take the field in person, and will be assisted in the conduct of the war, by a Military Council. His Majesty certainly will, in the course of the Autumn, review the various camps near London.

The following intelligence has been received from Falmouth, which we communicate on no other grounds than the account itself affords. We can only hope that more authentic information may soon enable us to confirm the truth of it: "Tuesday last, a pilot belonging to Helstone, in Cornwall, boarded a Prussian galion from Alicant, with salt, which vessel had the morning before been boarded by some persons belonging to a Guernsey privateer returning from Egypt, an extraordinary courier, the unexpired and at the same time disagreeable intelligence, that the Turks in Egypt have been deprived of Alexandria. This important city is now in the hands of a corps of rebellious Albanians or Arnauts.

The Brussels papers contain some important intelligence from Hanover and the Elbe. It seems that the French are determined to cross that river, which the Hanoverians seem as determined to oppose. The ostensible object for the advance of the French army across the Elbe, is to dislodge the Hanoverian men of war."

army, in fulfilment of the treaty of Subingen; but we presume they must have more important objects in view, as they meditate the crossing at three different places. The next accounts from that quarter will be interesting.

A letter from Amsterdam, of the 4th inst. says, "We are informed that the French government has demanded in the most precise manner, that similar measures to those adopted in France should be taken in this Republic, to prevent every kind of communication, direct or indirect, with England. It is expected that the exportation of every kind of provisions will be severely prohibited; orders are already given for the examination of all vessels at their sailing, and for sequestering all those who are not conformable to regulations, &c.

PHILADELPHIA, August 26. By the Amsterdam Packet, Capt. Hidelius, arrived yesterday, we have received French papers late in June. Their contents have been anticipated by previous arrivals. The following which has not been published here in its entire state, is the only article we observe worthy of translation:

ACTS OF GOVERNMENT.
NATIONAL CUSTOM HOUSE.

DECREE OF THE 1ST MESSIDOR. Art. 1. From the date of the publication of the present Decree, there shall not be received in the Republic any colonial commodity, arising or proceeding from the English colonies, or any goods coming directly or indirectly from England. Accordingly, all colonial produce or merchandise of English manufacture, or coming from English colonies, will be confiscated.

2. Neutral vessels destined for the ports of the Republic, must be provided with a certificate from the Commissary or Commercial agent of the Republic at the port of embarkation, which certificate must bear the name of the vessel, of the Captain, of the nature of cargo, the number of seamen, and the destination of the vessel. In the declaration, the Commissary will certify that he has seen the loading conducted under his immediate inspection, and that the goods are not of English manufactory, and that they do not proceed from England or her colonies. A copy of this declaration must be addressed to the Minister of Interior by the Commissary of the Republic, the same day the vessel sailed.

3. All masters of vessels, who by neglect of formality, or by changing the definition shall not be furnished with such a declaration, will not be admitted in the ports of the Republic, but under the condition in return of French manufactures to an equal amount of her cargo. The Director of the Custom House will forward to the Prefect of the Department a statement of the cargo and of the goods taken in return. On this statement, the Prefect will deliver the permission to leave the port.

The day Capt. Hidelius left Bordeaux, the American Consul seized an English vessel which entered at Bordeaux with forged American papers.

PHILADELPHIA, August 29.
LATE FROM LISBON.

The brig James Folger, arrived at Boston last Wednesday, in 35 days from Lisbon, and brings advices, that the strictest neutrality was observed by the Portuguese government; and that no French or English vessel of war was suffered to come above Ballam castle, or either power permitted to make any armaments in its ports. Capt. Folger also advises, that the king of Spain had informed Bonaparte, he should not permit the invasion of Portugal through his dominions; and that in defence of this position, if compelled to action, he would spill the last drop of the blood of his subjects.

Chances of Invasion.

That there can embark on board vessels to bring over 500,000 men, without our navy being prepared, as 5 to 1, that they can come over safe, (by the calculation of Bonaparte) 99 to 1: that they effect a landing in any considerable force, 2 to 1: that they can penetrate into the country without cavalry or heavy ordnance, or maintain a footing in three days, 10 to 1: that is to say 9,000 to 1, which is nearly equivalent to an impossibility of success on the side of our enemies.

But the chances for more durable success than that of three days, are far inferior still.

Lond. pap.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 6.

We are so accustomed to rebellions, that each new relation of this kind is not received with that dismay and astonishment which such events may be expected to produce. The 26th ult. the Porte received, from the commander in chief in Egypt, an extraordinary courier, the unexpired and at the same time disagreeable intelligence, that the Turks in Egypt have been deprived of Alexandria. This important city is now in the hands of a corps of rebellious Albanians or Arnauts.

These troops, the most valiant and intrepid in the Turkish army, lay in garrison, with others, in that city. As a poor reward, however, for their courage and their services, no pay had been given them for some months that the English merchants were p.s., notwithstanding their solicitations and their murmurs. The Pacha, commanding in Alexandria, often regarded them, it is true, with promises, but as often forgot to realize them. The Arnauts at length grew impatient and compelled their officers to conduct them into the presence of the Pacha, who, terrified at their menacing aspect, immediately issued an order to the Tefterdar, or general pay master, to pay them their arrears. With this order they proceeded to the Tefterdar, who resided at some small distance from Alexandria.—Either ignorant or fearless of the consequence, this man in office arrogant refused to comply with the Pacha's order; excusing himself by saying that there was no money in the chest. This was more than the disappointed heroes could bear; they began to mutiny against the Tefterdar, roughly handled him, as well as those who were with him; and concluded their insults by carrying him in irons, towards Alexandria.

The Pacha, who was perhaps not ignorant that his order on the Tefterdar would be dishonored, made preparations against the expected return of the Arnauts. Accordingly, on their approach he commanded the remaining part of the garrison to shut the gates and to point the cannon against them: upon which the rebels swore, in fury not to be described, that they would either conquer or die without suffering their rage to cool, they instantly procured some ladders, and other instruments, with the assistance of which they climbed up the fortifications of the city, spread terror and dismay, and in a few hours made themselves masters of Alexandria; a city which had been strengthened by both the French and the English, but which was now defended by Turks! The Pacha, as cowardly as mean, made his escape, with some of his adherents, out of a gate at the other end of the city; and the military chest fell into the hands of the Arnauts. Several persons however, were slaughtered before their fury subsided.

The capture of Alexandria, in this accidental manner, through the bad conduct of the Pacha and the Paymaster, may, in this moment produce the most important consequences, with regard to Egypt. The Porte, aware of this, hastened the departure of the Captain Pacha with his fleet. In short, they are determined to leave no means untried to regain possession of this fatal city.

PHILADELPHIA, August 29.
LATE FROM FRANCE.

Arrived, ship Liberty Wilkie from Havre-de-Grace. Sailed the 3d of July.

Active preparations were making in all the ports of France for the invasion of England.—This desperate effort of infuriated ambition, we are told, will most certainly be made by the first consul; and the French nation, partaking of the delusion and madness of her chief, is straining all her energies to effect this object. Boats were building with great expedition, and voluntary individual contributions were numerous.

From the New-York Mercantile Advertiser, of yesterday.

We acknowledge our obligations to captain Kemp of the regular trading ship Oneida Chief, who politely favoured the Editors of the Mercantile Advertiser with a file of London Papers to the evening of the 16th July—three days later than were received by the Caledonian. They do not, however, contain any article of consequence.

Count Haugwitz, the Prussian Minister for Foreign Affairs, is dismissed and disgraced. His disgrace is attributed to some dispatches from Englund, which he is said to have concealed from the King till they could no longer produce their intended effect. The King of Prussia was, it is said, requested, in these dispatches, to occupy the Electorate of Hanover before the arrival of the French, and to indemnify himself by appropriating the revenues of that country to his own use.

Letters from Petersburg mention that His Imperial Majesty had received the news of the occupation of Hanover by the French, which is said to have highly displeased him. The Russian fleets in the Baltic are ordered to be reinforced, and, if the French do not soon quit the mouths of the rivers Elbe and Weser, it is thought, more than probable that a considerable Russian fleet, with troops on board, would soon make its appearance at Travemond near Lubeck.

SALEM, August 23.

Capt. Norris (whose arrival and other particulars are under the Ship News) informs, that it was rumored at Lisbon, that a French army was on its march for that place; and advised to sail.

OLD SIMON.

TUNE...In a Mouldering Cave.
In a crazy arm-chair, on the downhill of life,
Old Simon sat calm and resign'd;
He had outliv'd his friends, he had buried his wife,
Old Simon was lame, deaf and blind.

But the being of Love, who still tempts the blast

With devotion had sweeten'd his mind,
Her gay similes o'er his wrikies Contentment had cast,

And cheer'd him tho' lame deaf and blind.

His misfortunes, his woes, could you hear him relate,
Insisting they all were design'd
To reclaim him from ill, or some bliss to create,

You'd long to be lame, deaf and blind.

When I learn, says Old Simon, that topics of state.
Infame each political chief;

That they back-bite, snarl, slander in noisy debate,
Old Simon's content to be deaf.

When fashion, that tempter, than the serpent more fly,
To folly Eve's daughters inclin'd;

When, with scarce a fig leaf, they obtrude on the eye,
Old Simon's content to be blind.

When battle's fell trumpets so frequently found,
And blood marks our annals with shame,

When abroad, war and murder areraging around,
At home, I'm content to be lame.

Thus, this worthy old man, by contentment and pray'r,

To the ills of his life was resign'd;
And in death he exclaim'd, as he sunk in his chair,

What bliss to be lame, deaf and blind.

With chaplets of joy, in the regions above,

His temples the Angels entwin'd;
Old Simon there blesses the Being of Love,

Who, here, made him lame, deaf and blind.

DIVERSITY.

A gentleman was lately asked for a description of a lady to whom he was paying his addresses; he said she was full of charms; for she was beautiful, dutiful, graceful, playful, fanciful, and careful.

Satirical Advice to Young Ladies.

If kind nature has bestowed its enchanting gift of a voice, and you can sing charmingly—let the company pres-till they are almost weary, and whenever it is affirmed by any person that you can sing, you may infest upon it you cannot—this is the greatest proof of good manners.

Are your teeth white? Show them up on all and no occasions! Laugh at every speech whether a joke or not; and protest, pon honor, you can't help it.

Be sure to abuse the drefs of every friend, by declaring such a one's gown ill made; such a one's handkerchief in a wrong place; thus you will appear to possess great candour and friendship.

Satirical Advice to Young Gentlemen.

Whenever you fail in conversation to amuse the company, begin to laugh most immoderately; thereby you will command the attention of all the spectators.

If any gentleman should tell a remarkable good story, never laugh, but immediately tell another story yourself; and then laugh as much and as loud as you please.

Wherever you go, be determined to find fault with every thing; thereby you will prove yourself a man of consequence.

Do you wish to be in love? Visit your mistress when you have drank freely of your bottle. Spirits give spirits.

Make a dying speech: thump your breast; flourish your handkerchief; and present a pistol.—If she is not moved at this, I will give you leave to shoot yourself.

Whenever you are in company with ladies endeavor to shew your learning; Use as many hard words and learned phrases as possible; it will excite great admiration.

Should the conversation happen to get beyond your depth, and you be pressed for a remark or reply, set up an affected cough or sneeze; and then say, dem'me, I forgot what I was going to speak.
